Equipping women with tools to shine in their workplaces, and more importantly, in their families

NEWS RELEASE

Georgia-based company launches programs to benefit working mothers

Bopape Enterprises, Inc. offers educational programs to help women shine in their workplaces and in their families.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Kennesaw, GA – August 5, 2011 – Bopape Enterprises, Inc. announces its training programs for weary, career-minded matriarchs. Research shows that women have allowed stressors from their careers to infiltrate their family relationships and vice versa. As a result, mothers, the glue that once held together families, are becoming a much weaker adhesive.

However, Bopape Enterprises, Inc. has solutions. Its president, Cherise Bopape, advocates wellness and preparedness through several educational programs. A domestic violence survivor and former single parent, Cherise Bopape asserts, “Generational success results when women have nurturing familial relationships, set healthy boundaries for their physical safety, are well-informed about the importance of work-life balance, and adapt a lifestyle of faith. A healthy woman is a more productive parent and employee who has the potential to incite perpetual growth.” She touts, “I’m proud of the service we provide to women in their unique roles as spouse, mother, or employee.”

The company’s programs address a wide range of topics: e-mail communication, domestic violence, work-life balance, parenting, and single parenting. Striving to level the playing field between genders, the company equips women for success. In doing so, it simultaneously helps employers increase their bottom line. When employees are properly informed and are satisfied in their roles, they take less time off, are more efficient, and require less managerial intervention.

Bopape Enterprises, Inc.’s executive officers boast more than three decades of combined experience comprising corporate course development and training, freelance writing, public speaking, and several facets of information technology. Cherise Bopape is an accomplished author and freelance writer with local and international television appearances. Her company’s clients include such Georgia based organizations as The Extension, Family Dynamics Foundation, Inc., and C&C Creative Parties and Events.
